Burgos is a municipality and a Spanish city located in the central northern part of the Iberian Peninsula. The city is the capital of the province of the same name integrated in the autonomous community of Castilla y León. In 2018 it had a registered population of 175,921 inhabitants spread over an area of 107.06 km², making it the 36th most populated municipality in the country and the second in the autonomous community. Its metropolitan area, formed by a large number of small municipalities, has about 20,000 inhabitants, which together with the central municipality form an urban area of about 200,000 inhabitants.

SHIELD

There is evidence of settlements from the Neolithic, Chalcolithic, Bronze Age and the First Iron Age in the hill of the Castle and in the hill of San Miguel, reliefs from which the city and the valley of the Arlanzón is dominated. However, it is considered that the city was founded as such by Count Diego Rodríguez Porcelos in the year 884. Around 930 it became the capital of the county of Castile, first dependent on the kingdom of León and then independent by Count Fernán González. It was the capital of the Kingdom of Castile, and intermittently the Crown of Castile, from 1230 until the reign of the Catholic Monarchs. These dictated in the city in 1512 the Laws of Burgos, the first laws that the Hispanic Monarchy applied in America to organize its conquest, the basis of current human rights.

It was later the capital of the ancient historical region of Old Castile, and was also the first provisional capital of the autonomous community of Castile-Leon. It was also the capital of Spain from 1 April to 18 October 1939.

It has an extensive peripheral green ring, two linear parks around the two main rivers that cross it and a large monumental complex, among which the Cathedral of Santa Maria, exponent of Gothic architecture declared a World Heritage Site by UNESCO, extended to the historic center in 2014, the monastery of Santa María la Real de Las Huelgas and the Miraflores Charterhouse.

In addition, the city is crossed by the Camino de Santiago, another World Heritage Site and is less than 15 km from the site of Atapuerca, also under the protection of UNESCO since 2000. On July 13, 2010, the Museum of Human Evolution, which exhibits the most important fossils found at the site, opened its doors in the city. It is currently among the ten most visited museums in the country.

It has a diverse educational offer led by the University of Burgos, which has more than 7,000 students, which stands out for its research quality and its relationship with the business world. It houses the headquarters of the High Court of Justice of Castile and Leon and the Instituto Castellano y Leonés de la Lengua.

In recent years the city has been immersed in various projects, such as the total urbanization of the Railway Boulevard, which, with about 12 km in length, is one of the longest avenues in Europe, through much of the city from east to west following the redeveloped route of the eliminated train tracks. Burgos was the Spanish gastronomic capital in 2013.
